Briefing

The importance of young people in Timor-Leste’s civil society

According to World Bank, about 60 percent of Timor-Leste’s 1.2 million people are under 25-years-old.

Like many developing countries, Timor-Leste has faced an increase in youth, where improvements in maternal and infant mortality rates led to a population with a high percentage of children and young adults.

This reality imposes many challenges, namely in the fields of education, health and employment.

Under the right conditions, the young people of Timor-Leste have an immense potential to positively contribute to the nation progress.

In fact, this young generation is the most educated Timorese ever. The young Timorese are driven and many are organized into associations and community organizations.

Timorese decision-makers must recognize that an active citizenship and encouraging civic engagement among the youth is a long-term investment in the social and political stability of the country and that with greater access to information and training, young people are able to contribute and add value to important decision making.

Young people need to have greater involvement in politics and in building the future of the country, as they represent the agents of change.

Special Economic Zones – Did you know?

Timor-Leste has two special economic areas: Oé-cusse Ambeno, an enclave in Indonesia, and Ataúro, an island very close to Dili. Both areas are considered by the Law nº. 3/2014 as Special Social Market Economy Zones (SSMEZ) and have administrative and financial autonomy, which means that both have independent finances, independent tax system, own procurement system, own financial market and own customs system.

While Ataúro Island was established as special zone to be a pole of a tourist nature, the area of Oé-cusse Ambeno was designed to be a trade and industrial pole and has attracted large investments in infrastructure.

Oé-cusse Ambeno offers, in its own territorial limits, exemption from payment of customs duties and respect for the principles of the social market economy as a model of economic growth. A Special Development Fund is set for the region, which is intended to finance the implementation of strategic social and economic projects, including road infrastructures, ports and airports, water and sanitation facilities, energy and telecommunication distribution networks, as well as hospitals and other social and tourism infrastructures.

Timor-Leste’s Youth

In this issue, we pay tribute to the country most valuable asset: its people, more specifically its youth.

As highlighted in our Briefing, about 60 percent of Timor-Leste’s 1.2 million people are under 25-years-old.

We wish them all the luck! You are the future!
